Abstract: This article highlights the importance and methods of effective organization of independent learning in foreign language teaching. The article discusses what benefits independent learning creates for students, how they manage their own learning process, and the possibilities of organizing learning in accordance with individual needs. The main ways of independent learning in foreign language learning are focused on goal-oriented planning, the use of Internet and mobile technologies, writing and speaking practices, a regular assessment system, and the role of teacher-mentors. The article emphasizes cooperation between students and teachers, personalized learning, and the use of modern technologies as important factors for the effective organization of independent learning. In conclusion, independent learning in foreign language learning is an important tool not only for increasing the student's level of knowledge, but also for making him capable of self-management and development.

Keywords: independent learning, foreign language, personalized learning, self-management, important factors.

Introduction: Learning a foreign language is of great importance in today's global world. Learning foreign languages not only improves language skills, but also allows you to broaden your horizons, understand other cultures, and strengthen international relations. However, the role of independent learning in foreign language teaching deserves special attention. Independent learning is considered not only to strengthen interactive communication between the student and the teacher, but also as an important tool for making the language learning process effective.

Independent learning is considered a process that helps the student develop himself, deepen his knowledge and understanding. Considering the role of independent learning in foreign language learning, the following main aspects can be highlighted:

Student motivation and responsibility: Independent learning develops students' ability to self-control and manage the learning process. This, in turn, makes them more responsible and motivated in the language learning process.

Personalized learning: Each student can plan their learning based on their individual needs and learning styles. Independent learning allows the student to personalize the learning process, which increases the effectiveness of language learning.

Multi-platform learning methods: Internet resources, mobile applications, online courses and interactive learning tools create a wide range of opportunities for independent learning in foreign language learning. Students can study at a time and place convenient for them, as well as set their own learning pace.

Main part: It is important to set clear and measurable goals for each student when learning a foreign language. These goals should correspond to the individual needs of each student. The plan should include short-term and long-term goals, as well as opportunities for analyzing and evaluating the learning process.

Today, there are many free and paid resources on the Internet for learning a foreign language. These include mobile applications for language learning (for example, Duolingo, Memrise), online courses, video lessons, and audio materials. Students can actively use these resources to strengthen their knowledge.

Regular listening and reading of the language is of great importance in learning a foreign language. In independent learning, a student can develop his listening and reading skills by reading texts of his own choice and listening to audiovisual materials.

Developing writing and speaking skills is very important when learning a foreign language. Students can develop writing skills through blogging, writing articles and essays, as well as speaking skills through conversations, participating in online forums and video calls.

In independent learning, the student should have the opportunity to assess his knowledge. Through this, he can identify his strengths and weaknesses and take the necessary measures to improve the learning process. This assessment should be carried out regularly, while at the same time increasing the student's ability to self-analyze and self-develop.

The role of teachers and mentors is also great in independent learning. The teacher should guide the student, recommend the necessary resources and constantly monitor the student's progress. The teacher should also help the student solve problems, motivate him and offer him additional resources.

Setting Specific Goals: It is important for students to set clear, measurable, and realistic goals. For example, setting weekly, monthly, and annual language learning goals and making plans to achieve them will increase student motivation.

Planning the Learning Process: Each student should plan their learning according to their own learning style. For example, students can choose to study at a time and place that is convenient for them, and choose their own learning materials.

Adapting to Individual Needs: Each student has a different learning pace, style, and goals. Therefore, the teacher should develop a personalized approach based on the individual characteristics of each student. This can be achieved by providing different forms of independent learning (e.g., video lessons, text materials, interactive exercises).

Encourage students to identify their strengths and weaknesses: Students should strive to strengthen their strengths and improve their weaknesses. The teacher should guide them in this process and provide the necessary resources.

Online platforms and applications: Active use of modern technologies, mobile applications and online courses in learning foreign languages will help students consolidate their knowledge. For example, language learning applications such as Duolingo, Babbel, Memrise can be used.

Videos and audio materials: Students should use audiobooks, podcasts and video lessons to develop listening and reading skills. Through online lessons, video materials and interactive exercises, students can master the language in practice faster.

Self-assessment system: It is necessary to create tests, online tests and opportunities for analyzing the learning process so that students can independently assess their knowledge. Evaluating their own successes and shortcomings increases motivation in students.

Motivation in achieving goals: Students should see their small achievements and be encouraged. Providing students with praise, certificates or other motivational tools for their success will be effective.

Supporting materials: Providing students with additional resources and materials (books, articles, online courses, interactive exercises) in learning a foreign language will deepen their knowledge.

Additional learning tools for the student: Students can develop practical language skills by using tools such as videos, audio lessons, news and social networks in language learning.

Conclusion: In foreign language teaching, effective organization of independent learning is important for deepening students' own knowledge, increasing their responsibility for the language learning process, and developing skills such as reading, writing, listening, and speaking. With the help of independent learning, a student can organize a learning process that suits their needs and develop their knowledge. The development of technologies and the expansion of global information resources create opportunities to make the process of learning foreign languages more effective. For this, close cooperation between the teacher and the student is necessary, as well as the development of students' self-management skills. Effective organization of independent learning in foreign language teaching requires cooperation between teachers and students, a personalized approach, active use of technologies, and a regular assessment system. Creating opportunities for students to manage their own knowledge, self-analysis, and increased motivation make the process more effective. The teacher plays an important role in the successful organization of independent learning by guiding students and providing them with the necessary resources.
